The first page opens the story. A traveller reached the old harbour at dawn.

She carried a small brass key. Nobody knew what it opened.

The second page follows her through the market. Dr. Smith sold maps for 3.50 pounds each.

Is this the right road? He only smiled and pointed north.

The fourth page comes after a blank one. The key fitted the lighthouse door.

Inside, the stairs went up for ever. This is the last sentence of the book.
